the master or directors of industries as a whole formed a class. A man's profession affected his position in the social scale indirectly, as it brought him wealth.

The word mata-ei-nana signifies simply people, rather than common people; it carries with it no sense of a lower class. There was truly in the Marquesas no conception of a low class. Individuals who voluntarily became dependents were called the vai-noa (common water) and others on account of lack of material wealth or of personality were called i'ino or kikino (mean), tupepaka or tupenoa (insignificant), and maunoa. But there were terms descriptive of individuals, not of a class.

THE KA'IOI

In the social order the term ka'ioi was anciently used to designate all males and females from adolescence to the time of settling down with more or less permanent mates to raise families. In other words, it included all individuals described by the terms mahai and poko'ehu, youth and maid. Ka'ioi signified in no way an organization but rather a native convention that approached a social institution. Every native during the years of adolescence and early maturity literally ran wild. Ka'ioi were not mere libertines, however, but performed a very definite function in society.

The mark of a ka'ioi, male or female, was the excessive use of saffron (ena). In discussing ka'ioi, a native said to me, "A'o'e te ena, a'o'e te ka'ioi" (without saffron, there is no such thing as ka'ioi). The loin cloth (hami) of the men was dyed yellow or yellow-orange in a mixture of perfumed coconut oil and raw or baked ena. The loin cloth (eu'eu) and robe (kahu) of the girls were likewise dyed yellow with unbaked saffron. The bodies of both youths and maids were anointed with saffron and oil, making them brilliant, soft, and—to the native sense—sweet-scented. Further embellishments were flowers in the hair and behind the ears, crowns and necklaces (hei) made of fragrant flowers or herbs, and particularly of the heavy scented pandanus seed. The prime motive of the ka'ioi was play. They spent their time in beautifying themselves and in circulating about the valleys in groups seeking amusement. Uta and komumu, love songs, and erotic songs called hioo, were those which they sang particularly.

During this phase of their life youths and maids were totally free sexually. An old European resident of the Marquesas has told me that it seems to be an irresistible instinct with natives of both sexes to run wild for a few years after adolescence, in pursuit of amusement in general, but of the satisfaction of their abundant sexual appetite in particular. A girl was looked down upon in native society if she did not run wild in this way, to withdraw from the others being thought unnatural and hence
